COUNCIL MEMBERS APPRECIATE ACTION OF LIBRARY DONOR

The Board of City Councilmen met Monday evening at the City Hall, with all members present except Councilman Moran, who was absent owing to illness.

Several requests were made by the Pacific Gas and Electric Company to set new poles in different parts of Daly City to improve their service, and the requests were referred to the light committee.

The Fay Improvement Company of San Francisco asked permission to improve Partridge Lane from Bellevue avenue to Hanover street. As this work is to be done under private contract, the matter was referred to the city engineer for approval.

The votes of the Colma Annexation Election No. 3 were canvassed by the council. The annexation proposition failed of approval, according to the official canvass.

The library committee reported many valuable books having been presented to the library by Mrs. John D. Daly on the birthday of the late John D. Daly, this being an annual custom.

The council voted a letter of thanks to Mrs. Daly for her generous and useful gifts.

After the salaries and bills for the month had been ordered paid by the finance committee, the council adjourned until November 14.

APPRECIATES EFFORTS OF OUR NATIVE SONS

The following letter from the Board of Trustees of our city was received and appreciated by El Carmelo Parlor No. 256, Native Sons of the Golden West. The members of the drum corps made a great effort under numerous difficulties, and they are well pleased to know that their efforts for the benefit of the community are recognized by the city trustees. The following is the letter:

Daly City, Cal., Sept. 20, 1927.

El Carmelo Parlor, Native Sons of the Golden West.

The attention of the Board of Councilmen of the City of Daly City has been drawn to the notice of the creditable manner in which your organization has represented our community in the recent celebration at Santa Cruz of the admission of our great State into the Union.

The Board wishes you to feel that your efforts to make Daly City prominent at such a time are appreciated. May your good work continue with unabated vigor.

Sincerely,
B. C. ROSS, City Clerk.

CHAMPIONSHIP WON BY JEFFERSON TEAM

After having tasted defeat for the last five successive years, the Jefferson Union high school football team, as well as the students body and factulty of our high school, feel pretty good these days, thank you.

And this grand and glorious feeling comes as a result of the outcome of the championship football game last Friday, played on Jefferson field.

Considered by many as being outclassed by the husky football players from South San Francisco, the Jefferson boys played rings around their opponents and won by a score of 13 to 6, thus winning the championship in the North Coast section of B division, P. A. L.

As a result of this victory, the Jefferson boys have won the right to meet the winners of the Southern section, B division, and expect to take them into camp.

The members of the football team, their coach, and the loyal rooters, are to be congratulated upon this victory, which brings the first championship to Jefferson Union high school.

Not only is there a feeling of pride for the team within the school, but every loyal citizen of this section will rejoice with them in their notable victory.

The members of the team who lowered the colors of South San Francisco are: Friend, center; Gibbons and Jenkins, guards; Williams and Perada, tackles; Brush and Abbott, ends; Plansky, quarterback; Aiello and Gohl, halfbacks; Kennedy, fullback.

GRACE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

The Sunday evening theme at Grace Presbyterian chruch will be, "What is in a Name? Be it Yours or Mine." Come and enjoy this hour's service.

It is not the function of the pulpit to tell the pew how bad it is, but how good it may become.

A river becomes crooked by following the line of least resistance, and so does man.

People are no longer just looking for the church of their choice, but are choosing where they may be able to do the most good.

Christ came to seek and to save the lost, regardless of cast or denomination. Forget the difference and let us magnify the things wherein we are alike, then we shall soon find ourselves nearing the great center, Jesus Christ, and we shall be one.

The Christian Endeavor members had a fine time last Sunday afernoon in singing and visiting with the ladies of the University Home, and expressed a desire to go again soon.

Everybody remember the C. E. social to be given in the dining room of the church on Monday evening at 8 o'clock. Be sure and come and bring a friend.

The ladies of the Guild are working over-time in preparation for the bazaar which is to be held December 2. You are invited to help to work here and not loaf.

CHAS. H. GATCHELL, Minister.

MRS. JOHN D. DALY PRESENTS NEW BOOKS TO THE LIBRARY

The following new books were presented to the John D. Daly library on October 22, by Mrs. John D. Daly, in memory of the birthday of the late John D. Daly:

Agnes; "The Grandmothers," Glenway Westcott; "Where's Emily," Carolyn Wells; "Carry on, Jeeves," Carolyn Wells; "The Immortal Marriage," Gertrude Atherton; "The Aristocratic Miss Brewster," Joseph Lincoln; "More Than Wife," Margaret Widdemer; "Now East Now West," Susan Ertz.

SPLENDID VAUDEVILLE SHOW PUT OVER BY LIONS AT THE STATE

Last Wednesday evening the members of the Daly City Lions Club, the civic organization that "knows how," presented one of the best entertainments ever held at the State Theatre since the opening of this local house.

Those who were responsible for the arranging of the splendid program are to be congratulated on their choice of the high class entertainers who took part in the vaudeville program, all seeming to possess that community spirit necessary to put it over.

The evening's entertainment opened with the feature picture, "Resurrection," featuring Rod La Rocque, at the conclusion of which Dr. W. J. Lantheaume in a few well chosen words explained the objects and aims of the Daly City Lions Club in sponsoring the theatre party. All funds raised by the Lions, he said, will be used in the promotion of community service, such as children's playgrounds and the Boy Scout movement, and many other objectives that are in their infancy.

Miss Francis Poket, who is only 13 years of age, delighted the audience with her acrobatic dances that were performed in such a graceful manner and with such apparent ease that she won the hearts of all those present from the very start. She was assisted in her act by two well known accordion players, Leo Guispi, of Daly City and Frank Puccini, of San Francisco.

McFarlane McGregor, local tenor and singing leader of the Lions Club, dressed in Higland costume, delighted the audience with two songs, "Lassie O' Mine" and "O Sole Mio," singing the latter in Italian. Mac was in splendid voice and took a number of curtain calls. He was accompanied by Prof. T. Eugene Goudey at the piano.

"The Rag Time Soldier Man," a comedy sketch presented by Beeson and Harris, was a feature that proved to be a most agreeable surprise. The team of Beeson and Harris is none other than our own Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Beeson, of the Thomas Jefferson Cleaning Works. Before they came to Daly City to make their home and enter the business field, Mr. and Mrs. Beeson were favorites on the Orpheum and Pantages circuit, but preferred to give up their work on the stage and settle down in our midst. The theatre going public lost two excellent entertainers when they cancelled their engagements. The act presented on Wednesday night was written by Mr. Beeson. These popular artists have certainly won a home in Daly City by their clever acting and singing.

The entire performance was repeated at the second show, both performances being witnessed by a comfortably filled house.

YOUNG PEOPLES' MEETING AT THE METHODIST CHURCH

A real live evangelistic young peoples' meeting and social will occupy the interets of the Epworth League group Sunday afternoon and evening at the Daly City M. E. church. At 5:30, Mr. James McGriffin, secretary of the California Conference Epworth League will conduct a social hour, after which refreshments will be served. "Jim," as he is called by the Leaguers, is one of the outstanding Young Peoples' workers in the state of California. You will all enjoy him. All of the young people of the community are invited to be present. At 7 o'clock "Jim" will lead the League. Make it a point to be present.

The evening service will be one worth remembering. At 8 o'clock the Gospel Team of the California Conference Epworth League will take charge of the service. This will be a great evangelistic service for young and old alike. Mr. Fear will sing a special number. Mr. Fear has been the soloist for the past few months at Wesley Methodist church in San Francisco. We are very fortunate in having him with us.

Everyone was particularly delighted with the fine showing of the choir and soloists last Sunday evening in the special musical program. Everyone seemed to enjoy the service, and we can boast of the finest singing in the whole San Francisco district. Mr. Broom is doing a splendid piece of work in the handling of the choir, and with the efficient music committee consisting of Mrs. Bennett and Mrs. McKee, we expect big things this year in the way of music.

The Ladies Aid meets every Thursday afternoon at 2:30 in the church, corner of Vista Grande and Santa Barbara avenues. The ladies are getting ready for their bazaar. All of the women in the neighborhood are invited to come and do their bit.

Boys, don't forget the friendly Indian meeting every Tuesday afternoon at 3:30. Boys from 9 to 12 invited to come, regardless of your church preference.

The Sunday school is moving forward. We have classes for every age, for young and old. Come and enjoy it with us. Please don't forget the morning service. We need your support in making the morning service a success. Don't forget the hour—11 o'clock.

You will be glad to know that the minstrel show under the direction of Mr. Cashion netted about $40 for the church. We are grateful to all those who took part in it, for their untiring efforts. The pastor was called away that week to take charge of a funeral service in Northern California, near Susanville, and regretted very much his inability to attend.

ELLIOTT L. FISHER, Minister.

BURLINGAME MASONS DEDICATE NEW TEMPLE

Burlingame's new Masonic Temple was dedicated by officers of the grand lodge of California on Saturday with impressive ceremonies. The new building is located at Howard avenue and Park road and is among the finest temples in the state. There is a large auditorium in addition to lodge and clubrooms.

Growing from a charter roll membership of 27 members to the present enrollment of 480, the dedication ceremonies marked the tremendous growth of the Burlingame lodge, No. 400, F. and A. M., which was founded in 1908.

The new temple is to be used by other fraternal bodies of the city and the ground floor is being finished in store rooms.

RACING MEET MAY BE HELD IN SPRING AT TANFORAN TRACK

It now seems probable that a racing meet will be held at the Tanforan race track next spring. According to a story appearing in the San Francisco News, the prospects of the followers of racing being permitted to again journey to Tanforan to witness contests between the fast horses are growing brighter. The News says:

If present plans of Joseph A. Murphy materialize, there will be a horse race meeting at Tanforan in the spring. Murphy, lessee of the Tanforan track, arrived in San Francics Monday from the east.

"There is nothing to get excited over in my visit," said Murphy on being interviewed. "It is too late to assemble a meeting at Tanforan just now, but if I can operate cleanly and legally, I would like to hold a short meeting there in the spring and place my whole proposition at the bar of public opinion, just as I did in New Orleans and Chicago.

"If the decision is that I have failed to conduct a clean, high-class sporting proposition, to which no man or woman need be ashamed to lend their names, the legislature can make short work of us a year from January.

"This much I can assure everyone, that I am bitterly opposed to the resumption of professional bookmaking in California or any other state. If the legislature would hand me a legalized bookmaking proposition on a silver platter, I would reject it.

"My position in respect to San Francisco racing has not changed. In 1914 a number of business men in New Orleans invited me to revive racing there. After a careful perusal of the statutes, I decided that it was not the legislative intent to destroy racing or the things necessary to successfully conduct it, and I accepted the invitation. Three times we carried cases to the Supreme Court, and each time our contention was upheld.

"It was the same thing in Chicago. Invited to open Hawthorne, we enjoined, in a chancery court, the district attorney and sheriff from interfering with us. After racing two years, the legislature last winter, with no opposition from the press of the state, legalized us and placed us under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture.

"This leaves San Francisco as the only metropolis in the world without thoroughbred racing. At the invitation of some of the most influential men of San Francisco and its environs, and the breeders of the state, I am here to remedy this. I am not a promoter. I have reached a position in life where racing in San Francisco is not necessary to me. It would add nothing to my prestige and little to my prosperity. The whole proposition is a sportsman's one to me.

"Under the subscription system of racing, I would simply be operating racing for the public and horsemen. The only difference in what I would be doing and what the state of California is doing at the State Fair at Sacramento is that I ask the public to take the burden of expense from the horsemen and assume it themselves."

WORK PROGRESSES IN WIDENING HIGHWAY

Work is progressing rapidly in the widening of the highway from Colma through Lawndale, and soon the "bottle-neck" will be broken.

The last of the detours to enable traffic to proceed down the peninsula during the final construction of the new highway was completed last week when the county road crew finished the portion on Rainier street, leading from San Bruno road, thereby establishing a detour from the former thoroughfare, back of the Bank of Italy at Colma, to the main highway.

Working in co-operation with the State Highway Commission and for the benefit of traffic down the peninsula during construction of the widened highway, the road crew of the First township several wekes ago started rocking and oiling several stretches of Colma's streets, working over-time in order that traffic might not be delayed.

And incidentally Colma secured a number of splendid highways by these activities, consisting of two layers of rock and two heavy coats of oil. The following streets were rocked and oiled: Alamani from Market to San Pedro road; Mateo street from School street to Market street; Rainier street from San Pedro to the corporation yards, and Market street from the state highway to the railroad crossing. The repairing of these streets enabled the contractors on the "bottle-neck" widening to proceed with their work unhampered and at the same time has provided excellent detours for auto traffic down the peninsula, even after the "bottle-neck" work is completed.

The business men and citizens of Colma, as well as state highway officials, have commented on the speedy work on these detours, for they constitute some of the best road work in the First township.

"THY SON LIVETH!" TEXT OF SERMON

The following sermon was delivered by Father James Donoho at St. Maximus church last Sunday:

Today's gospel furnishes us with a striking example of parental interest and affection. Shortly before the scene of today's gospel there was a crisis staged in the ruler's palace that we can readily picture. On his sick bed in the darkened room this young man writhes in agony. Death has surprised him. It clutches at his heartstrings and has written its sentence so legibly that all can read it on his palid face and bloodless lips. There are hushed voices—cautious footsteps—guarded whispers. The sunken eyes have some strange glaze upon them and they strive with touching wistfulness to read upon the faces that surround, some sign of hope. His father appears in a new light to him now. He sees him biting his quivering lips to keep closed the floodgate of tears. He always seemed stern and preoccupied, never given to the expression of his feelings, for a father hides his hurts as a warrior hides his wounds. He may suffer many disappointments, but he wears his heart turned outside in—no one ever knows his hurts. His face may reflect pride, love, joy, but there is something mysterious about him when it comes to things that hurt.

Although this dying son is physically exhausted, his mind is still active and he seems to realize how very much he misunderstood his father. How often he regarded his prohibitions as a wall between him and some pleasure, and later found them shields to guard and lead to higher happiness. Now, too late, he has faith in his father and realizes that he paid the penalty of living and only wanted to be a support, a help to protect his son from the worries and dangers of life.

Though the gospel makes no mention of it, his mother, if she was living, was there. In the greatest tragedies ever enacted on the stage of time, mother is always there. At Golgotha, when the world's Savior writhed in agony on His cross between two thieves, when He cried, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" not one of his cherished disciples were there, but His Mother was present.

In the stress and strain of life, or in the agony of death, if a mother is living, isn't she always there? When the prison gates open and the prisoner fares forth to freedom, who is ever at the portals to meet him—the mother. When the law demands its supreme penalty, who is at the gallows to receive the body of the victim? A mother. When pleas are made for the pardon of an offender, who is there on her knees with streaming eyes, imploring mercy? A mother.

When the poor body of a man or woman—self-slaughtered—awaits a claimant, who is there to claim it, to

COUNTY OFFICIALS ARE VINDICATED OF PROTECTION CHARGE

Federal prohibition agents last Saturday night raided three places of business in Rockaway Beach, a hotel, a grocery store and a soft drink parlor, and placed under arrest the proprietors, Charles Gust, Herbert Bazinetti and Jim Karkalas, all being charged with having liquor in their possession.

It is said that the arrests were made following the receipt by federal officials of an anonymous letter in which the charge was made that a girl whose home is in Oakland had been rendered half unconscious by liquor in a Rockaway Beach resort, dragged from her drunken escort to an inner room and assaulted. And that the resorts were being protected by officials of San Mateo county.

The three men arrested were taken before the federal commissioner in San Francisco and later released on bail.

By order of Sheriff James J. McGrath, Constable S. A. Landini went to Rockaway Beach yesterday and placed Karkalas under arrest. He was taken to the sheriff's office and there was questioned by Sheriff McGrath, Constable Landini and District Attorney Franklin Swart.

Karkalas confessed that he was responsible for the anonymous letter sent to Federal Official Bohner, which was the immediate cause of the raid. That he had hired an attorney, whose name is being withheld by the officers, to write the letter which formed the basis of Bohner's raid upon the Rockaway Beach resorts. This letter, Karkalas said, declared that the girl had been attacked by Bazinetti, and that San Mateo county officials were protecting the Rockaway Beach resorts and permitting the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Karkalas declared that his motive for sending this anonymous letter to Mr. Bohner was because he desired "to get even with Bazinetti." That a spirit of jealousy and revenge had prompted the act.

Kakalas declared that he had never paid for protection by county officers, and that he had no knowledge of anyone being protected. His sole object in making such an entirely untrue statement in the anonymous letter was to cause Bazinetti trouble.

Karkalas has had more trouble since his arrest by the prohibition agents. On Tuesday his place of business was destroyed by fire, evidently of incendiary origin.

TENDERED SURPRISE SHOWER

A surprise shower was given for Mrs. Carl Andersen, of 642 Bellevue avenue, at the home of Mrs. E. H. Jordan, of 576 Bellevue avenue, on Thursday afternoon of last week. The hostesses were Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Abbott and Mrs. Jordan. The luncheon table was beautifully decorated with favors appropriate for the occasion in pink and blue. Mrs. Andersen received many beautiful gifts. Seated at the table with the guest of honor and hostesses were Mrs. E. Erickson, Mrs. Eldrup, Mrs. Miller, Mrs. Fernleaf, Mrs. Peterson, Mrs. C. Olson, Mrs. Lewis, Mrs. P. Fahy, Mrs. Christen, Miss Gowland, Mrs. Reiman, Mrs. Holtberg, Mrs. Erickson, Mrs. Kroen, Mrs. G. R. Seach, Mrs. Larson, Miss Ethel Abbott, Mrs. Alson, Mrs. Snell, Mrs. Noren.

LOCAL FIREMEN ATTEND ASSOCIATION MEETING

On Sunday, October 23, a meeting of the officers of the California State Firemen's Association was held at the Veteran Firemens' hall on Fell street, San Francisco.

Captain Meyers of the Los Angeles fire department, president of the association, was in the chair. Business of great importance was taken up.

San Mateo county was represented by Phil Ross, chairman of the advisory board of the San Mateo County Association, Charles Rodenberger, president of the San Mateo County Association, and George R. Augustien, Fire Commissioner, Daly City.

MEETING OF SCHOOL TRUSTEES

The trustees of the Jefferson school district held their regular monthly meeting at the Vista Grande school on Wednesday evening.

Trustee Sweeney reported on the heating of the new rooms at the General Pershing school.

Trustee Augustien was authorized to get the estimated cost of placing a bulkhead on the Reisel street side of the school property.

Complaints have been received about a number of dogs in the school grounds and the pound master has been instructed to impound any dogs

DRIVERS MUST HAVE OPERATOR'S CARD

An immediate check of the files of the Division of Motor Vehicles to secure the names of motorists who are driving without an operator's card has been ordered by Chief Frank G. Snook.

This followed the discovery by the department that approximately 25 per cent of the drivers in the state are violating the law by driving without a license. Clerks in charge of the files estimated that 400,000 persons are without license in the state.

Simultaneous with the order, Snook announced that a campaign would be launched to compel such drivers to obey the law.

The division has an easy means of checking the list of violators since the file of names of persons to whom cards have been issued may be compared with the files showing registered owners. Both are kept in numerical order.

The new motor vehicle act requires that every applicant for a license, upon first applying, must submit to an examination as to his physical and mental fitness to drive.

Snook said no person who has hitherto driven without a license would be prosecuted, provided he shows a disposition to comply with the law by applying for his card at once.

"Persons who are without operator's license should lose no time in getting one," Snook declared. "No person who can exercise reasonable control over an automobile or who has no serious physical defects has anything to fear from the examination. The examiners are instructed to extend every courtesy to applicants and to make due allowances for stage fright and nervousness.

"To drive without an operator's card is to violate the law and lays the driver open to embarrassment and possible arrest. Our officers have orders to ask every motorist for his license when stopping him for any reason. Lack of a license may mean that your trip will be delayed or that you may be compelled to abandon it altogether.

"It is not our intention to harass the motorists, but merely to see that they comply with the law. Do not blame the officer, therefore, when he demands your license. He is merely complying with his orders."

Sometimes a crooked man finds it easier to make both ends meet.

IN the "sands of time", footprints are marks of progress. In the business world, steps may often be symbols of lost motion. "THY SON LIVETH" TEXT OF SERMON wrap it with the mantle of forgiveness, to bedew it with tears? A mother. What is the sweetest word in every language, the one word that touches the stoniest heart, and can draw back a wayward son or daughter from the path of sin and crime? It is the word "Mother."

In all superb artistry limned on canvas, what portrait surpasses all others? Is it Cleopatra of Egypt? Elizabeth of England? Catharine of Russia? in their queenly robes, sparkling with priceless jewels? No! It is the Madonna with the ineffable smile of mother love—the sweetest smile that ever lit a human face. Attune your thoughts to love's sweetest melody and honor yourself by honoring your mother.

She carried you through your unfashioned helplessness and lavished her love upon you. Eternity will bear witness to this fact—that the wealth of a mother's love is priceless. It does not perish, it cannot pass out. If she still lives, live for her. Do not be satisfied if she has a room, her meals, and is comfortable. Strew her days with kindness, for one today and another tomorrow are worth more than a monument at the end of her life on which you have etched the word "Mother." Dead eyes cannot read their epitaph. Her brow may be wrinkled, her cheeks furrowed, her hair gray and thin, but she is your mother, and if you are the right sort of person she will be to you the most beautiful being on earth.

In the sick room of the young man mentioned today, besides his father and mother, there was another—a servant more skilled in the art of healing than all others, and he put up a gallant fight to save his young master. He has applied every known remedy, given every possible assistance, but now realizes the boy is beyond human aid. If he is to be saved, assistance must come from above. When the father comes to him and asks the condition of the patient, he is told there is no hope, he lies at the point of death.

Let us pause a moment and think how we will feel when someone shall say of us: "He lies at the point of death." This moment will come, for death is the surest thing in life. It is hastening toward us from the moment that the first faint cry of infancy fell upon the ears of our mother. Death is closing in on us, and death terrifies because it is followed by judgment.

The church sounds her warning of judment frequently, not to raise terror and dismay in our hearts, but it is sounded in mercy. Her one grand effort is to prepare us for the shock of death. To a Christian, death is not an enemy, for we are taught to walk through life sustained and soothed by the thought that no matter what valleys we pass through, no matter how heavily the world presses on our shoulders, a time will come when we will be rewarded for evil shunned—and for good deeds done.

Death is not the end of things, for we know in every human heart there is a yearning for immortality, a yearning for life beyond the grave. Are these necessary credentials—the amassing of great wealth, attaining high honors? Do they consist in pleasure, in science, literature, art? When a man is dying, when hope is gone, do we try to interest him in the world and its works? Shall we bring him a newspaper and read for him the state of the stock market, the prospects of trade? Shall we read for him a speech somebody made upon a question in which he is deeply interested? Shall we tell him of the trend of politics, the League of Nations, and the like? No. He is no longer interested in world peace. His thoughts are centerd on making peace with God.

We do not mock his dying moments with news of the world, for he knows that before a few autumn leaves have withered on his grave, the world will run along its course and forget him. Rather do we think, "How is it with this man's soul?" Is he prepared for the awful change that is soon to take place? Is he prepared to stand before God in judgment? We send for a clergyman to soothe, with Christ's Sacrament, the agony of his passing, to give him the credentials to heaven before it is too late.

We remember, as the father in today's gospel remembered Christ, and take our sorrows to the One who can remedy the past and mould the future. This father had heard of Chirst, who went about Judea and Galilee curing the sick and infirm. As a last and only resource he went to Him. Losing no time, he pleaded for he life of his son. What is Christ's sentence? "Go thy way, thy son liveth." He had faith and returned home and found things quite different. He found a home of laughter and merriment, where joy reigned supreme, where they came to him and said, "Thy son liveth."

I pray that when life ends for you, when your throbbing heart is stilled—with the knowledge of your faith, your prayers and charities, those who crowd around your bedside may feel that Christ has pronounced a sentence of life upon your soul. I pray that a service rendered to God and your fellow men will be a source of consolation to those who love you and will help them go back to life with the words of Christ to hearten them, "Thy son liveth."

CAN KEEP IN TOUCH WITH CHILDREN BY TELEPHONE

When an emergency arises, Sacramento parents can call their children by telephone during school hours, as a result of the thoughtful action of the school trustees of that city in having telephones installed for this purpose. In connection with this innovation, the Sacramento school trustees have requested the public to "remember these phones are only for necessary use, and that it is assumed users will not expect a class to be interfered with by trying to get a teacher or pupil during class hours. When you call, your number will be taken at the office and your party will be permitted to answer at the first available opportunity."

WANT HALF DOLLARS

There appear to be fashions in coinage as well as in other things, according to a recent statement by the Treasury Department, although no variety of real money ever becomes entirely out of style.

From banks throughout the country has recently come an unusual demand for silver 50-cent pieces, to supply which the mints are turning out these coins at full capacity. In September approximately 600,000 half dollars were coined as compared with only 88,000 during August. None were coined from 1924 to 1926.

This circumstance recalls a number of coins once minted, but which are now obsolete and seldom seen, such as bronze 2-cent pieces coined between 1864 and 1873, the nickel 3-cent pieces of 1865 to 1890, the silver 3-cent pieces of 1851 to 1873, the silver half-dime of 1853 to 1873, and the 20-cent pieces issued only from 1875 to 1878.

The half-dollar, the present great demand for which is unexplained, is one of the oldest United States coins, having been first authorized in 1792.

WOMAN CHARGED WITH DRIVING WHILE DRUNK

Arraignment of Mrs. A. M. Brown, of Burlingame, on a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated, scheduled for Monday morning before Judge Ellis C. Johnson of Daly City, was postponed for one week when J. E. McCurdy, San Mateo attorney for Mrs. Brown, presented a doctor's certificate declaring the defendant to be in a San Mateo hospital. She is said to be suffering from shock and nervous collapse.

Mrs. Brown was arrested last week by Officer Lee Bond of the state traffic squad after she crashed into an automobile driven by F. H. Green of Eureka, who was on his way to Arizona with his daughter Pauline. Both were treated for injuries at Mills Memorial hospital

FARM FIRE LOSSES

In connection with the observance of Fire Prevention Week, Secretary of Agriculture Jardine issued a statement urging farmers to give greater attention to fire protection, not only one week, but every week in the year.

He declared that last year fire took a toll of about 3,500 lives and caused a loss of property estimated at about $150,000,000 in rural districts alone.

Principal causes of farm fires, in the order of their importance, are said to be lightning, defective chimneys, carelessness with matches by smokers and others, wooden roofs, spontaneous combustion, improper handling of kerosene and gasoline, and faulty wiring of houses.

Aid in educating the rural population to give more serious thought to this problem is urged upon the county agents, rural school teachers and community leaders.

The fact that you believe the average man will give you a square deal is pretty good evidence that you practice square dealing yourself.—Frank Facts.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Leasing activities continues to hold the interest of the oil companies in Kern county. Should terms of leases be carried out upward of 100 new wells would be drilled there within the next year. Land leased for oil exploitation lies in every part of Kern county, some of it forty miles from present production areas.

Allen Ensley McClanahan, 77, who died at his home in Berkeley last week, claimed the distinction of having been the youngest man to carry a musket in the Civil War. Born in 1850, he crossed the plains by ox team with his family in 1857 and enlisted at 14 in 1864 in Company I, 7th California Volunteer Infantry, being mustered out from Presidio, San Francisco.

California boasts 5,636 public educational institutions, exclusive of her universities, it was announced last week by the State Department of Education. The schools were classified as follows: Elementary schools, 4,125; kindergarten, 907; high schools, 466; teachers' colleges, 7; junior colleges, 10; junior high schools, 121.

One hundred deep-sea fishermen of San Diego united last week in a court action against the State Department of Agriculture and the State Fish Exchange, attacking the constitutionality of the law which empowers the State market director to regulate the price of fresh fish. The law permits the director to place an arbitrary limit on the price fishermen may ask for their catch. The price fixed in recent months is less than the cost of operating the fishing fleet, plaintiffs contend.

The joint legislative water investigation committee, headed by Assemblyman Bradford S. Crittenden of Tracy met at Sacramento last week, starting a tour of Northern California dam and reservoir sites. The committee, which is to report to the 1929 Legislature with recommendations as to water conservation and distribution plans, consists of four Senators and four Assemblymen.

Airplane passenger travel between San Francisco and Los Angeles has become so great that the Pacific Air Transport, which operates the coast air mail and passenger service, has been forced to put a new six passenger cabin plane on its southern run, it was announced last week. The new ship is an enclosed-cabin Fokker monoplane, powered with a Wright J-5 whirlwind motor—the same type as that Lindbergh uses.

With $59,000 in Modoc county funds made available last week, plans are being made for State-county co-operative work in providing more adequate highway facilities between Alturas, Modoc county, California, and Lakeview, Lake county, Oregon. The program calls for construction work to the Oregon line, at New Pine Creek, connecting with new work being carried forward in Oregon.

Recommendations that steps be taken to make the Weimar Joint Sanatorium, Placer county, a State hospital for care of persons suffering from tuberculosis are contained in a report by the Sacramento county grand jury. The institution at Weimar is now supported by a group of Northern and Central California counties.

With 1,118 suicides reported in California last year the state board of health a few days ago declared that acts of self destruction have reached the point where attention must be paid to the causes of suicide. California's suicide rate for last year was 27.1 persons per 100,000 of population. San Diego led with a rate of 48.9 suicides per 100,000, while Sacramento was second with a rate of 42.1. Los Angeles reported 283 suicides in 1926, a rate of 37.9; San Francisco 199 or a rate of 35.1 and Oakland 61, or a rate of 23.4. The fact that California is a haven for invalids and migratory workers is regarded as one of the chief factors in swelling the number of suicides in the state.

There are 82,764 borrowers from building and loan associations in California at the present time, or an increase of 26 per cent, or 17,212 over 1926. This is shown in the annual report of George S. Walker, state building and loan commissioner, which has just been submitted to Governor C. C. Young. New real estate loans made so far this year numbered 30,922 or an increase of 3,018 or 10.8 per cent over the preceding year. A total of 11,185 loans were made for building purposes during the past year. More than 6,500 loans were for improving old structures. The average amount of each loan was $2,661.

With the aim of breaking, if possible, the barrier established by the silk industry in the eastern part of the United States and proving that silk can be manufactured successfully in California, the Industrial Department of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce is engaged in a study of the silk industry. L. O. Head, chairman of the committee, cited last week the successful operation of a small silk plant at Hermosa Beach and also pointed out the silk threading plant at Petaluma to show that silk establishments can be made to pay in California.

A United States War Department allowance of $400,000 for erection of permanent improvements at the California National Guard's new encampment site near San Luis Obispo was announced by Adjutant General R. E. Mittelstaedt last week upon his return from Washington, D. C.

Declaring advices received by him indicate natural gas is being wasted in the California oil fields at a rate of 100,000,000 cubic feet a day, Governor C. C. Young last week announced appointment of a special committee of five to devise a plan, if possible, for natural gas conservation. The announcement at the executive office at Sacramento estimated that the daily waste of natural gas amounts to $150,000, or approximately $55,000,000 a year.

"Petters," joyriders and other examples of "flaming youth" were responsible for approximately 80 per cent of the automobile thefts in California last year, it was estimated by Frank G. Snook, chief of the State division of motor vehicles. Stolen car records reveal, Snook said, that something like 18,115 motor cars were taken by young people intent on having a good time. The statement quoted statistics indicating that 22,644 cars in all were stolen during the twelve months and that between 90 and 95 per cent of them were ultimately recovered.

San Diego one day last week had its warmest day of the year and one of the warmest October days in the history of the local weather bureau. The temperature reached 88.4 degrees at 11 a. m., and was above 80 for most of the day. A low pressure area, according to the weather bureau officials, allowed a blanket of hot air from Arizona to creep in. There was little humidity in the atmosphere.

Busy days are ahead for the state printing plant. State Printer Carroll H. Smith announced recently that more than 700,000 public school text books are in the process of publication at the plant, and a new order for 125,000 civics has just been received from the state board of education. The civics are for delivery January 1st. In addition to the text book jobs the printery is turning out for 1927 statutes, containing the laws enacted by the last legislature. The peak production of 200 volumes per day will not be reachel until next week, Smith said. The plant has just completed the printing of 25,380 elementary arithmetics at a cost of 24½ cents per book, and 25,535 first readers at an average cost of 17.7 cents per copy.

Oil field operations reported to State Oil and Gas Supervisor R. D. Bush during the week ending October 15, 1927, show 21 new wells started, as compared with 16 during the previous week. Of the 21 notices to drill filed last week, two were for wells in the Long Beach field, one in the Montebello field, one in Los Angeles county, three in the fields of Ventura county, one in San Luis Obispo county, one in Alameda county, 10 in the fields of Kern county, one in Fresno county, and one in Kings county. The total new wells this year is 977.

More than 200,000 persons will attend the Pacific Travel and Trade Exposition, which is to open in the Civic Auditorium, San Francisco, on Armistice Day, according to estimates made by various committees in charge of the arrangements. More than 100,000 students and teachers from all parts of the State are expected. Products of agriculture and of various arts and industries from counties surrounding or reached by the Pacific, will be displayed in a manner that impress upon the student an idea of the comprehensive resources of those sections of the world with which California and the United States interchange trade.

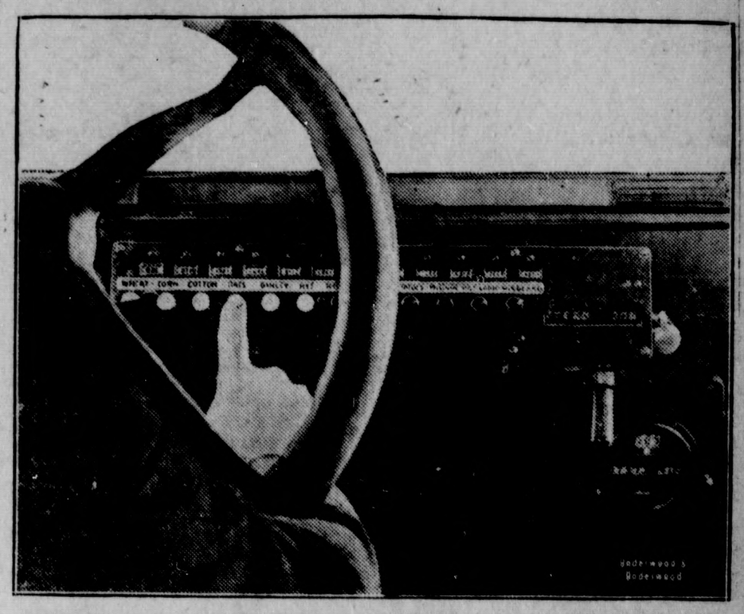
Total agreement with the stand of William J. Cooper, State Superintendent of public instruction, that life certificates for teachers should be abolished, was expressed last week by Dr. Elwood P. Cubberley, dean of the Standford School of Education at Palo Alto. "California life teaching certificates are the cheapest of any State in the Union," Dr. Cubberley said. "All that is required is for a teacher to get a job and hold it for 44 months, and the life certificate is granted."

The State of California's outstanding bonded indebtedness totals $103,013,500, it was announced by State Treasurer Charles G. Johnson, last week. The treasurer's report showed $113,208,000 bonds sold, of which $10,194,500 represents the amount redeemed. Out of an authorized bond total of $140,105,000, Johnson said, $26,897,000 worth of securities are unsold. The amount of bonds outstanding, the report showed, includes highway securities, India Basin and veterans welfare bonds. The treasurer's statement included the estimate that California's population as of October 1 totals 5,112,000.

Petitions from Monterey, California, for revival of the $800,000 authorized harbor development project at that place were given consideration for several hours last week by the rivers and harbors board of the army engineer corps at Washington, D. C., but with no indication as to what decision the board reached.

Announcement was made recently by Charles H. Camper, city superintendent of schools at Chico, Butte county, that the 1928 convention of the California Teachers' Association, Northern District, will be held next September in Chico.

MAKING AN ESTIMATE OF CROP ACREAGE



"Cropmeters," machines designed to help the Department of Agriculture crop reporting service make prompt and accurate estimates of the acreage devoted to different crops, are now being used by the department in various sections of the country. The "cropmeters" are installed in automobiles in the same manner as a speedometer. In passing wheat, for instance, the operator presses the "wheat" button and the machine clicks off the size of the field. This photograph shows how the "cropmeter" is operated from the driver's seat.

OWNERS CARELSS ABOUT CAR LOOKS

Automobiles Not Always Kept Clean as Carriages Were.

In the days of the horse and carriage every owner was proud of his equipment. He would not think of riding down the street or through the park unless his horse was groomed so that the animal's coat looked like silk and the harness trimming glistened in the sun. His carriage was immaculate.

Pride in Equipment Lacking.

Now that the automobile has in a large measure displaced the horse there does not seem to be the same pride in equipment that formerly existed. Perhaps it is because in the hustle and bustle of the world today, people have not time for such things or it may be that they have grown a bit careless. Not all are careless about how their automobile looks for there still remain a number who take the same keen pride in owning an automobile that has been well groomed as they do in their own personal appearance. The vast majority, however, are content so long as the car runs.

Little by little this condition is changing and it will come about more rapidly when the general automobile public are educated to the fact that dust, grime and grease, either on the body or running gear of their machine, is an enemy to efficiency of operation. The present-day automobile gathers from out the air a film composed of oil and dirt which clings to the paint or lacquer finish and cannot be removed except with a cleanser.

Injures the Finish.

It is impervious to water itself, though a washing will soften it up and make its removal much easier. In time this scum attacks the finish and eventually will require that the car be sent to the paint shop. On the running gear and chassis it works this scum into the moving parts and dirt being an abrasive it is only a question of time until looseness in steering and spring shackles, as well as brake rods, brings to the owner's attention the fact that his car is wearing out faster than it should.

Like other things regarding the care of an automobile, a system has been devised and patented whereby an automobile can now be thoroughly washed underneath as well as on the body, top and hood while the owner waits. The total operation takes about fifteen minutes.

Upper Hose Connection Needs Replacing Often

Motorists who have wondered why it is that the upper water hose connection needs replacing more often than the lower one only have to know their engine a little better in order to understand the reason. Circulation of water is from the pump up through the water jackets to the top of the radiator, or up through the water jackets in the same direction in the case of thermo-syphon cooling, in which a pump is not utilized. This means that the hotter water always is rising and that the water is hottest when it is passing through the top water hose to the radiator.

This heat has a disintegrating effect on the rubber hose connection. The connections at the pump receive cooler water from the radiator and generally last longer.

Brake Test Devised

Are your four-wheel brakes adjusted equally? Here is a simple way to tell: Apply the brakes both gently and vigorously about a dozen times, then stop the car and feel each brake band to see whether they seem equally hot. Allowance should be made for greater heat at the rear bands, because in some cars these brakes operate before the front ones come into action. This test may keep the bands on one side of the car from burning out prematurely.

Scientists Striving to Find New Fuel for Auto

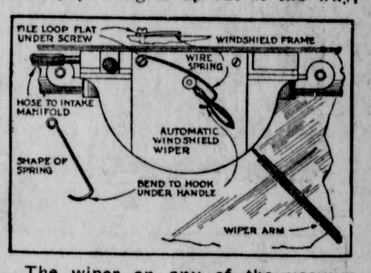
Acting on the oft-repeated statement that the American gasoline supply would be seriously depleted within from 10 to 25 years if consumption continues at the present rate, a series of experiments are being carried on by the Purdue university engineering experiment station regarding the carburetion of heavier fuels. These experiments are being conducted with kerosene and other fuels and the data are being carefully filed for future reference.

Results of the experiments have been published in a bulletin issued by the engineering experiment station. This publication presents data on the carburetion of kerosene and provides additional information concerning the effect of fuel volatility on the carburetion problem. Its purpose also is to show how an engine operating on kerosene reacts to variations in the strength and temperature of the mixture, to point out the optimum temperature for satisfactory performance and to specify the correct mixture ratios for economy and power.

The bulletin has been noted with interest by automotive men generally and also by fuel companies of the country, which are vitally interested in this work.

Keep Windshield Wiper in Its Proper Place

The mechanism of your windshield wiper wears in after it has been in use for some months and then you will experience some bother because the jarring of the car will gradually move it down into your line of vision. To save yourself the annoyance of constantly pushing it up out of the way,



The wiper on any of the vacuum types of automobile windshield wipers can be kept out of the way with a piece of spring wire bent as shown.

add a spring slip as shown in the illustration. Then when you wish to use the wiper on rainy days, the end of the spring is slipped out from underneath the arm and it snaps away from the path of the wiper arm. If your wiper is different from that illustrated, change the shape of the spring to clamp under any convenient screw.—Popular Science Monthly.

EDUCATION WEEK

Education is the foundation upon which this country has been built, the factor through which it has attained prosperity and good government. It is through the public schools that the ideals of America, the principles of government, the ability to make good, industrious and patriotic citizens are instilled into the character of the child. In recognition of this and "to acquaint the public with the actual work of the schools, with their ideals and achievements and their needs," the week of November 7 to 14 has been set aisde as Education Week. It is sponsored by the National Education Association and the American Legion, and by action of the World Federation of Education Associations at its Toronto meeting was recommended for observance throughout the nations of the world. Monday is to known as Health day; Tuesday, as Home and School day; Wednesday, Know Your School day; Thursday, School Opportunity day; Friday, Armistice day; and Saturday, Community day.

It is indeed appropriate that Armistice day should be incorporated into this week. It marks the end of a struggle during which many thousadns of lives were sacrificed "to make the world safe for democracy."

The struggle must be carried on that they will not have suffered hardships, endured pain and death in vain, not, it is true, with guns and implements of warfare, but through the public schools.

The perfection of the public school system, giving an equal opportunity to every child, will be the greatest and most lasting monument that can be erected to those whose graves give mute testimony of the great sacrifice they made.

Keeping this in mind and that the future welfare of the country is dependent upon education, every citizen should take upon himself the responsibility of seeing that Education Week is observed and attains its purpose: "That the public be informed of the achievements and needs of the schools."

The objectives of the schools that the National Education Association and the Legion suggest be emphasized during the week are:

Sound health; worthy home membership; mastery of the tools, technics and spirit of learning; faithful citizenship; vocational effectiveness; wise use of leisure; ethical character.

ROUGH RIDER MYTH

Probably 99 persons out of 100 who have read or heard of the famous Roosevelt's Rough Riders of the Spanish-American War believe that those ambitious troopers charged up San Juan Hill on horseback, booted and spurred, sabers waving in the air.

A writer in a recent magazine graphically portrayed their exploit as that of "500 men on horseback standing in their stirrups and galloping along, shouting to one another like polo players."

The truth is that the Rough Riders marched and fought on foot in Cuba, as did other Cavalry regiments, their horses having been left behind when they sailed from the United States.

Due to Roosevelt's vivid personality and the large amount of publicity given the regiment by New York newspaper men, the Rough Riders received the lion's share of credit for the victory at Santiago, a share rather greater than was their just due.

That they were brave men and good fighters none will deny, but they were in that respect no different from other troops, some of whom received scant attention in the dispatches. The Rough Riders did no riding, rough or otherwise, in Cuba.

Among the essential qualifications for a prize-fight referee is the ability to count ten to the satisfaction of all concerned.

HOLIDAYS AND SPECIAL WEEKS

Being a partiotic individual with a lively sense of duty, Guy E. Marion, of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, has been checking up on the various special "weeks" which good Americans are urged to celebrate, so that he might not miss any of them.

As a result of his researches, he finds that we have 135 of these "weeks" to observe during the year, although the regulation calendar only shows fifty-two. The busiest months for the conscientious observer of special weeks are April and November, with nine each. October has seven.

In the November list we find Better speech week, Book week, Education week, Canned Foods week, Children's Book week, Father and Son week, War on T. B. week, Thanksgiving week and Red Cross Roll Call week.

Besides the imposing array of "weeks," there are also eighty special days to be celebrated, either by the country as a whole or by certain states and groups—national holidays, birthdays, religious festivals, and what not.

If Mr. Marion participates in all these observances, he will be kept more than busy. In fact, he will have to lead a double life most of the time.

HOW THEY STARTED

Countless stories, true stories at that, have been published to illustrate how poor boys have risen to fame and fortune in this land of opportunity. A new list recently compiled includes the following:

John J. Bernet, once fired from his job as a blaksmith's helper because he could not accurately judge when a piece of iron was properly heated, is now president of the Erie railroad.

Walter L. Ross, president of the Nickle Plate system, and Harry M. Adams, head of the Western Pacific, both started as messenger boys. R. B. White, president of the Jersey Central, began as a telegraph operator. Lawrence A. Downs, new head of the Illinois Central, was once a rodman with a surveying crew.

Edward G. Steubert, president of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, was once a newsboy, and Robert H. McElroy, vice-president of the same company, was a messenger boy.

Samuel Rubel, now owner of millions of dollars worth of New York property, quit a job at $3 a week thirty years ago because his employer would not raise him to $4.50 a week.

Thomas Moses, president of the United States Fuel Company of Illinois, once a mule driver, now has 40,000 men under his management.

The list might be extended to a great length. In every community are examples of men who have risen from poverty and obscurity by sheer energy and grit. The road is open for thousands more.

DISCARDS GEAR SHIFT

Automobiles of the future may be operated without the necessity of shifting gears, according to reports of a new French invention, furnished by the American consul at Paris.

With the new mechanism, which displaces the gear box and differential and takes the place of the cogs between the motor and wheels, the speed of the car from the moment the ignition is turned on is regulated exclusively by the accelerator.

Tests recently made demonstrated the success of the invention attached to a 10-horsepower car carrying 11 passengers. On a hill with a 20 per cent grade the car was stopped and started again at will.

It is said that the present cost of installing the new device is approximately $300, but this will doubtless be reduced when it reaches production in quantity. It is said that manufacture will soon be begun in France and other countries, including the United States.

The necessity for shifting of gears is one of the chief annoyances, as well as one of the dangers, of motoring, and the perfection of a device whereby these may be eliminated will be welcomed by the automobile owner everywhere.

RESERVOIRS NO USE

Studies recently made by army engineers with a view to determining the value of reservoirs for flood control in the Mississippi valley have led to the conclusion that such schemes are practically worthless, besides their cost would be enormous.

For example, it is shown that the present reservoirs on the Miami river above Dayton, Ohio, constructed at a cost of more than fifteen million dollars, are successful as a means of local protection, but it is a matter of chance whether they would favorably affect flood conditions on the lower rivers. Even if their action were favorable, it would reduce the height of the Mississippi river less than one-eighth of an inch.

It was further shown that if these reservoirs were operated with a view to reducing the flow in the Mississippi they would not afford the local protection for which they were primarily designed.

The conclusion is, therefore, that the only feasible means of Mississippi flood control is higher and stronger levees, with deepening and widening of the river's channel at such points as may be necessary.

TRAINED INVENTORS

The almost incredible increase in the number of labor-saving devices developed in recent years leads to the conclusion that we have travelled far from the day when an inventor was hailed as something of a genius.

Now the invention of mechanical devices is a more or less routine procedure by trained engineers, who invent to order. In fact, invention has become what might be termed a branch of engineering. Creators of some of the most effective labor-saving machines are hardly known outside of their own organizations, yet their labors are having a tremendous effect upon our economic life. To quote a recent writer:

"Ditch-digging machines that do the work of 400 men, automatic planers that slice through blocks of steel as though they were so much butter, drill presses that pierce 80 holes in a casting at one operation, great steel fists that descend on a sheet of metal and give it the form of an automobile fender, giant cranes that pick up weights of 20 tons and travel with them the length of a machine shop, mechinacally operated buckets that unload 10,000 tons of ore from the hold of a ship in half a day—these and countless other machanisms not only take the place of unskilled labor, but reduce production costs."

Thus the work of trained inventors has made the productivity of America the envy of the world, at the same time giving our workmen larger wages and shorter hours of labor.

A press dispatch refers to "Miss Elaine Wilcox who suddenly married Prince Gialna Gadschalchi," but fails to state how suddenly she learned how to pronounce her new name.

A recent shipment of razors to Africa indicates that they are going to have a big dance over there.

NEWS ITEMS OF 1776

Items from old newspapers are of interest to many, and so we have found a few taken from a copy of The Massachusetts Sun, published in Worchester on July 17, 1776, the front page of which was devoted to the Declaration of Independence, then less than two weeks old. A news letter from New York said:

"On Wednesday last the Declaration of Independence was read at the head of each brigade of the Continental Army at or near New York, and everywhere received with loud huzzas and utmost demonstrations of joy. The same evening the equestrain statue of George III was by the sons of freedom laid prostrate in the dirt. The lead wherewith this monument was made is to be run into bullets, to assimilate with the brians of our infatuated adversaries, who, to gain a peppercorn, have lost an Empire."

A resolution by the House of Representitives at Watertown requested that people of the colony donate their leaden window weights for the making of bullets.

Among the notices was one stating that there were "a considerable number of prisoners in the town, who are willing to go out to service if proper persons should appear to hire them."

Delinquent subscribers were a problem in those days, as they have been ever since, it appears from a card from the publisher, who thanked those readers who had paid up, adding: "He begs that such as have not paid him would be so considerate as to think of the great disadvantage it must be to him to have so many small sums in different hands, therefore would now request that they would pay their respective balances, which will greatly oblige their humble servant, Isaiah Thomas."

After 151 years a good many publishers may still find Mr. Thomas's courteous suggestion quite applicable to present conditions.

We read that a young lady "gave up her job in the soup works to study economics." And probably found that it is an effective measure of economy to eat plenty of soup.

Don't despair if your boy is lazy. He may become the world's champion flag-pole sitter.

A New York physician has caused a lot of uneasiness by declaring that "worry only kills fools."

DIRECTS BUSINESS FROM BED BY THE TELEPHONE

Undaunted courage and an ingenious adaptation of the quickest means of communication serve John Due, an engineer, in good stead. Flat on his back in a Chico hospital, Due is directing the installation of hoists on a large timbering operation, near Powellton, thirty miles distant, by means of a telephone placed at his bedside.

Due was rushed to the hospital, recently, after his legs had been broken when he jumped from a moving car at the scene of his company's operations. The next day a rush order for a telephone was sent in and within an hour an installer appeared at the hospital. A telephone was placed in Due's room and, within a few minutes, he was in touch with his foreman, at the scene of operations.

With the aid of the engineer's telephoned instructions, the important and complicated work on the timber project is proceeding satisfactorily. When completed the big hoists will move whole trains of logs up and down the steep sides of a canyon. Due has followed such work all his life. His direction by telephone will probably be carried on for at least three weeks, when it is expected that he will be able to return to the scene of operation.

We can readily believe the report that Rev. Jordan of Georgia, charged with having five living wives who will appear at his trial, is in "a highly nervous condition."

Certain Eskimo tribes believe that a person with a bad temper is possessed by a devil. We sometimes feel that the Eskimos may be right about it, at that.

George Washington may have been entirely truthful, but he never had to make any circulation statements for a sorry newspaper.

The prophecy came true. At the very next corner the girl turned to the left, and then held on, straight across two avenues, until she reached a street where the cars ran. She made as if to cross this street, too, for she went straight out to the middle of it; then stopped, obviously at fault, and retraced her steps to the car rail nearest the curb.

"Well, that's plain enough," said Ashton in a tone of disappointment. "She's brought us so far, but can't take us any farther, for here is where he took the car."

"Wait a bit," said th doctor. "Watch the girl."

She was crouched very low again, and quartering around in a circle, just as she had done at the foot of the standpipe. Presently, to the surprise of all of us, unless it may have been that the doctor guessed, she caught a scent that satisfied her and led her diagonally back to the sidewalk; and once here, without a pause, she set out in the direction of downtown, straight down the middle of the sidewalk, her gait, that seemed unhurried, unfaltering, a sure-footed compromise between a walk and a run.

"It seems to be all right," said Ashton rather breathlessly, as we hurried on after her, "only I don't quite see what he went out into the street for."

"To see if a car was coming, I suppose," said the doctor. "There wasn't one in sight, so, rather than risk waiting, he set out afoot. And I think he did wisely. I haven't seen a car in either direction. Have you?"

We had not, and, what was still more to the point, followed the girl at the rapid pace she set, for half an hour without seeing one.

When we had first set out with her, our curiosity as to what she would do prevented us from paying much attention to the condition of the streets; but when the chase had straightened itself out into this long pursuit down the avenue, we had time to think of our surroundings, and to speculate whether they bettered the chances of the man we were pursuing or improved our own for catching him. The trolley wires were evidently down in every direction, and the streets were so glassy with the frozen sleet and so perilous with the snapping, spitting ends of live wires that trailed here and there, that what little wheel traffic there was moved only with the very greatest difficulty. Without the means of tracing him, which the doctor's hypnotic power over the girl had provided us with, he would, after several hours, have been absolutely secure from pursuit. There would have been no other way in the world of hunting for him than by this simple, primitive method of tracking him by his scent.

It was fortunate for us that there were few pedestrians abroad that night, for the girl's strange, uncanny gait and our hurried, breathless pursuit of her would, in anything like normal conditions, have created a sensation which would have rendered the pursuit itself impossible. As it was, the few people who had ventured out found all they could attend to in the ice-glazed sidewalks, the wind-whipped corners, the fog and electrical peril of the streets. A few curious glances were cast after us as we went hurrying by, but that was about all.

Suddenly the doctor dropped a hand on my arm. "I know where she's going," he said. "I ought to have guessed it before ever we started. Look there." As he spoke, he pointed ahead and upward, through the fog, and, following the direction of his pointing finger, I made out, faintly, a luminous clock face.

"What is it?" said I. "I haven't kept track of where we were going. The fog confuses me."

"It's the Western station," said the doctor, "and Wilkins, my boy," he punctuated the remark with a buffet on my shoulder, "Wilkins has gone to Oak Ridge! I ought to have known him well enough by this time to have foreseen that that was what he would do."

"I don't believe he'd be such a fool," said Ashton, "but I hope you're right. If he's gone to Oak Ridge, we've got him. I've got two men out in the Morgan house watching it, on the lookout for anyone who might turn up there, and nobody who does turn up will be able to get away until they have accounted to me for their visit."

We had all lagged a little. "Come along," said the doctor. "We mustn't get too far behind."

We were pretty well winded, all of us, but we gathered up our energies for a final sprint, and turned into the great waiting room just behind her.

She went straight to the ticket window, but without a pause there or a glance through, she turned in a sharp angle, exactly as a dog would do, and padded across the waiting room toward the doors which opened into the train shed.

"Follow her!" the doctor commanded Mallory. "I'll see about the trains."

I was at his elbow when he spoke to the clerk. That functionary was gaz-

"In Heaven's name!" he said, "what is she? A woman or a beast?"

The doctor did not answer. He ignored the question utterly.

"When is the next train for Oak Ridge due?" he asked.

The ticket clerk rubbed his hands over his eyes. "Did you see her?" he asked. "That creature that just went through the door?"

I did not wonder that he was horrified. I remembered my own feeling when I had seen her start down the corridor toward Wilkins' room.

The doctor paid no attention, and in the same level voice in which he had spoken before, he repeated his question about the train for Oak Ridge.

With an effort, the clerk rallied his wits and answered him.

"There was a train pulled out about ten minutes ago," he said. "There won't be another tonight. The wires are down on account of the sleet, and we've practically abandoned the suburban service. It's too dangerous. Everything has to run without orders."

"Did you hear that, Ashton?" said the doctor, turning away. "The last train to Oak Ridge that will run tonight left ten minutes ago."

CHAPTER X

Ashton had followed Malloroy part way across the waiting room, a little nervous, I think, at the idea of letting the girl out of his sight. So he had not heard what the clerk had just told Doctor McAlister through the ticket window.

"Well," he said, "that is all right, isn't it? We don't want to go to Oak Ridge. If the train Wilkins took started only ten minutes ago, there's ample time to arrange to have him arrested before he sets foot on the platform at Oak Ridge. Where's the telegraph office in this station?"

"It won't do you any good," said Doctor McAlister. "There will be no telegraphic communication with Oak Ridge tonight."

Ashton glanced thoughtfully about the room. "That possibility hadn't occurred to me," he said at last.

"It occurred to Wilkins," said the doctor. "That's why he went. He's the one man of us who really grasped the situation. He knew just what that sleet storm meant—that over a territory fifteen or twenty miles square electricity was going out of the business of serving civilization for a few hours. That one vital fact turns the world topsy-turvy, and makes some difficult things easy and some commonplace things impossible. For just tonight our thoughts can't move any quicker than our bodies can. So Wilkins has set out for Oak Ridge, and we can't head him off. The only thing we can do is to follow him. The question is, shall we try to do that?"

I followed Ashton's glance just then, and saw Mallory coming back with the girl. She seemed unconscious of his presence, and made straight across the room to where the doctor was standing in conversation with us. She halted beside him without a word, her manner perfectly quiet, though expectant. She was merely waiting for him to tell her what he wanted done next.

For the moment he paid no attention to her, did not even glance sideways at her as she came up.

"That's the question," he repeated to the attorney. "Shall we try to go out to Oak Ridge tonight? You spoke of having two men on watch there all the time. Can you safely leave the matter of coping with Wilkins to them?"

Ashton walked away a few paces, then whirled and came back. His look was troubled, disquieted.

"I wish you were there, Mallory," he said. "Green and Benson aren't any too wide awake. They'll have a man to deal with who has just outwitted us."

"There are two courses of action open to us," said the doctor. "One is, to go home and go to bed. The other is, to get hold of an automobile and try to get out to Oak Ridge tonight. Our getting there at all is problematical with the roads in the present condition."

Ashton whirled round and spoke to Mallory, "Go and telephone to the nearest garage for an automobile; quick!" he said. Then, addressing us, he went on: "There is no necessity for your going, Doctor McAlister, or Mr. Phelps, either. But Mallory and I can't afford to waste a minute."

"You've wasted one already," said the doctor, "telling Mallory to go into that telephone booth."

Ashton, heartily cursing his own stupidity, darted off after his messenger.

"I think I'll go along with them," said I to the doctor, "just on the chance of my being of some service."

He laughed. "Are you thinking you'll leave me behind? Come, Phelps, you know me better than that. No, we'll all go."

His gesture included the strange, silent, expectant figure that had been standing at his elbow all the time.

"Do you mean to take her?" I questioned.

"She's brought us so far. She's given us, up to this point, every material fact that has made it possible for us to establish Haines' identity and get on his trail."

It just happened then that my eyes were on the girl. I saw her shiver, saw a look of human intelligence and perplexity appear for the first time in that strange face of hers. I tried, with a nod, to direct my chief's attention to her, but before he could get my meaning, Ashton came hurrying back.

"There's a garage only two or three blocks away," he said, "and Mallory ought to be back with a car in a very few minutes."

Then he held out his hand to the doctor. "I can't begin to tell you," said he, "how grateful I am for the help you've given us, nor for your patience with my unenlightenment."

"No valedictories now," said the doctor interrupting. "You're not going to be rid of us so easily. We're all going with you."

"Good!" said Ashton. "I hoped you would, though I felt I hadn't any right to ask it of you. Come! There's the motor. Let's lose no time."

My memory of the next two hours is one of unrelieved discomfort and constantly increasing apprehension. We skidded across street car tracks and had a dozen of what in normal times we should have called narrow escapes, in the first dozen minutes. After that, we stopped counting. The excitement of the chase was mounting in our veins.

"He must be there by this time," said Ashton at last with a shudder. "I wish I knew that Green and Benson were still alive."

"I tell you he won't kill," said the doctor, "not if he can help it. He'll do it if they succeed in forcing his hand; that I admit. But his own cleverness is the greatest safeguard those two men could have—his cleverness and their stupidity."

"I wish I shared your confidence," said Ashton.

"Think a minute what the situation is," said the doctor. "Suppose we had him now, safely, in our hands. We know what he is. We know that he is morally responsible for the murder of Henry Morgan. But suppose you were not the district attorney. Suppose that Haines came to you and retained you in his defense. Wouldn't you tell him that, with the criminal law in its present state and the methods of prosecuting criminals what they are today, you would have an excellent chance of riddling any case that we could make? Wouldn't you tell him that, never in the world, could he be convicted of murder in the first degree, by any court or any jury?"

"Yes," said Ashton ruefully, "I suppose that's true."

"You may be sure," the doctor continued, "that Wilkins realizes that. And realizing it, you may be certain, also, that he will not commit an indubitable first-degree murder, if he can help it."

"Murder—"

The word made us all start. It was uttered, hardly above a whisper, by the wild half-human creature, through whose instrumentality we had been able to get on the true murderer's trail. And yet, in some subtle way, she had spoken in a new voice; not the soft-throated guttural speech of the Maori girl, nor yet in Jane Perkins' New Zealand modification of cockney.

Wanted No Witnesses to Theatrical Flight

In Sir James Barrie's play "Peter Pan," Tinker Pell gets up on her stage wings, hovers about the room and flies out of an open window. The playwright, watching one of his rehearsals, expressed a desire to try the mechanism by which this flight is achieved. So attendants attached the wires to the distinguished gentleman and prepared to hoist him in the air.

The amusing part of the story followed. Sir James, a veteran in the world of the theater, was suddenly struck by a terrible and overwhelming stage-fright. He commanded that every one leave the boards, and had the front curtain put down and the the backdrop, the curtain and the wings, he was lifted up, maneuvered over Tinker Bell's route, and, in all his disheveled dignity, soared out the window unperceived.

Darwin's Life Work

Darwin, the famous expounder of the theory of evolution, was born in 1809, the son of a physician of Shrewsbury, England. From 1831 to 1836 he made his voyage round the world in the Beagle, on which he was the naturalist. In 1859 he published his great work, "Origin of Species." Subsequently he elaborated and defended his theory. Among these works was the

ADA'S IDEA

More and more Ada had the idea in her head that it would be wonderful to go off and have adventures. She did get so very, very weary of all the chores she had to do at home.

They became so tiresome, and then adventures would be such a great deal of fun.

It seemed as though chores always had to be done at such bad moments, too—just when she wanted to go off somewhere and have a nice time playing.

Angelina Adorable knew just how this was.

"But the worst of it all is, Angelina Adorable, the cousins are coming."

Angelina Adorable shivered. She knew the cousins.

She knew Clarence, the boy who made her dear little mother so unhappy when he chased butterflies and pinned them so they couldn't move again or dance around the bright flowers to sip little meals.

She knew the way he used to hide her, so Muvvy had to hunt and hunt for her, for Angelina couldn't call without her mother's help.

"Then there's Cousin Lily, their mother, you remember, Angelina.

"She wears such ugly nightgowns and she mutters to herself and she always expects me to kiss her though she can't hear me at all.

"She says I'm a restless child and that I have tantrums. And I only do when she comes.

"And she has three funny things on her face, Angelina, which prickle no matter where you put your cheek.

"And her hair's so long and stringy when she lets it down at night and her underlip hangs down so you can see fat crinkly lines inside.

"Then there's Netty who's a year younger than me. She won't play with Crystal as she says Crystal's a kid and that I ought to take her everywhere.

"But if she gets into a puddle and gets wet I'm blamed because I should have looked after her better, and she tattletales."

Angelina Adorable shivered again.

She was a very stylish and a very grand doll, but she did hate tattletales.

"And they always want me to do chores or errands when I've something else to do.

"Cousins don't think you've got anything important to do yourself."

"When are they coming?" Angelina asked.

"Tomorrow," said Ada, sadly.

They were quiet for a minute or two. Then Ada said:

"Don't you wish, more'n anything that we could get all the people and the things we liked best and go off somewhere like an island, or a big field, or something, and have it all to ourselves where nobody'd ever find us and where we could have a perfect time?"

Angelina Adorable said, so eagerly:

"Oh, Muvvy darling, wouldn't it be perfect!"

"Let's do it," said Ada.

"Let's," agreed Angelina Adorable.

The Friendly People

Once there was in a city a big brick house. It stood on a hill and gave warmth and shelter and comfort to people who were in need of just those things. And it was called the Home for the Friendless.

Not far from this place lived a family of children. They had always been surrounded with affection and care and had always been happy; and so, since they had never heard of anybody who was friendless, they thought the name was the Home for the Friendlies! You can see yourself how it would be a very easy mistake to make; but the people in the home didn't think of it as a mistake at all. In fact, it made them glad to be known as the Friendly People, and among their friends they always counted the children who lived not very far away from the big brick house.—Christian Science Monitor.

Anybody Asleep?

Paul lived in a home where the father worked nights. He was four years old and on many days had been told to keep very quiet so that his father could sleep. On visiting the public library, where he had been forewarned about behavior, Paul tiptoed up to the librarian and whispered, "Is there anybody asleep here today?"

"Then I am glad to meet you, Lord Tennyson," replied the editor, "but I was under the impression that you had died years ago."

The BABY

Why do so many, many babies of today escape all the little fretful spells and infantile ailments that used to worry mothers through the day, and keep them up half the night?

If you don't know the answer, you haven't discovered pure, harmless Castoria. It is sweet to the taste, and sweet in the little stomach. And its gentle influence seems felt all through the tiny system. Not even a distasteful dose of castor oil does so much good.

Fletcher's Castoria is purely vegetable, so you may give it freely, at first sign of colic; or constipation; or diarrhea. Or those many times when you just don't know what is the matter. For real sickness, call the doctor, always. At other times, a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria.

The doctor often tells you to do just that; and always says Fletcher's. Other preparations may be just as pure, just as free from dangerous drugs, but why experiment? Besides, the book on care and feeding of babies that comes with Fletcher's Castoria is worth its weight in gold!

Farms Raise Own Gas

Farms may be made to produce their own gas for use in cooking, heating and lighting, according to the inventor of a generator that makes gas from the waste products of the farm. Cotton, cornstalks, straw and sawdust have been employed successfully, says Popular Mechanics magazine, a ton of material producing about 1,000 cubic feet of gas.

Longer Skirt and Higher Waistline

Dipped Back Is an Effective Method of Lengthening the Hemline.

Sartorially there may be safety in numbers, but safety comes a long way from connoting chic. There has been a current impression during recent seasons that, due to the immense diversity of fashion themes offered at each new opening, one might wear even last season's clothes with impunity. It is a fact, asserts a fashion writer in the New York Herald-Tribune, that if you exhaustively search the recent autumn collections you may be able to make out an excellent case for yesterday's wardrobe. But fashion is not one of the verbal arts, and however plausibly you may argue in favor of last year's mode exploiting it is distinctly another matter.

For there are certain details, some apparently insignificant and some looming large on the modal horizons, which must be incorporated into the contemporary wardrobe. You might call them the hallmarks of this winter's chic. Without them you can be dowdily correct; with them you are fairly certain of attaining at least a modicum of what parades so smartly under the name of Paris chic.

Consider first the skirt portion of your winter costume. Of primary importance is the fact that it must be markedly fuller and slightly longer than it was a season ago. The fullness must not commence until below the hips; there is still a conforming effect at this sector of the silhouette. The circular line and the plaits are the smartest ways of accomplishing the current skirt width.

As to the added length, one inch will be sufficient. You may also accomplish this longer skirt impression by means of the irregular hemline, or a line longer in back, at the front or at the sides. The dipped back is a particularly effective method of lengthening the hemline.

Tunic Silhouette Is Smart.

There is no general silhouette dictum. The new tunic silhouette, accomplished occasionally by posing loose overskirts above the conforming foundation, is novel and unquestionably smart. The two-tiered effect is quite as effective. You will also find that the draped line will lend your costume an indubitably modern air. If you exploit this draped theme—and we strongly advise it—see that you choose crepe satin as the fabric medium.

Another significant development in the new silhouette is the diagonal line introduced through seamings, buttoned fastenings, fabric insets, pockets and the diagonal band which starts from the shoulder and works its way down the front of the costume.

Little need be said of the waistline. The dividing point between bodice and skirt should be higher—not quite normal, but very close to it. There may be some objections to this higher line on the ground that it cannot be esthetically accomplished with the current supple silhouette. The solution then is simply to raise the waistline to the highest point compatible with the individual figure.

Sleeves are not the focal point of the reviving elegance, but they are one of the principal factors. It is their function this season to contribute generously to an air of elegance, and that should be your primary consideration in choosing your winter clothes. The butterfly lace sleeves, the box-plaited type, the circular species, conforming in miniature to the silhouette, and such novelties as the contrasted sleeve offered by Philippe et Gaston, wherein the left sleeve is full and the right member contrastingly tight, are among the smart new winter sleeve conceptions.

Both Sides of Crepe Satin Used on an Afternoon Dress.

Winter Crepe Satin Liked.

Most prominent among the silks of winter is crepe satin, equally important for both afternoon and evening wear. Taffeta is again listed among the smart materials, and its use is principally concentrated on evening gowns and draped effects. Velvet, of course, retains its pre-eminent niche, and there is the usual assortment of coarse and fine woolens developed by such artists as Rodier and Meyer. Last but not least among the materials is lace, a favorite of yesteryear, still exploited, but furtively, yet one of the most certain marks of the new chic.

An Ottoman Coat Collared and Cuffed With Red Fox.

In black, white and vivid colors we particularly commend it to your attention.

You need not be greatly perturbed over the new color situation for the winter months. Many reports have come from Paris and scarcely a hue has been neglected in the stentorian proclamations issued under the apparent cover of authority. Really it does not make a great deal of difference what shade you select. Blues are en regle, and so are browns, and there is the usual winter furor over black, as well as black and white. With such a wealth of color to select from we offer two suggestions: First, and most obvious, select the color which becomes you most. Secondly, try to avoid, so far as possible, the shades you affected last season. Above all, be neither misled nor confused at what are commonly referred to as Paris color dicta. They are of no value.

So far as decoration is concerned you may exploit it lavishly. Embroideries, buckles, buttons, seamwork, jeweled touches, metal stitching, fringe—indeed, anything in the line of elegant embellishments has its place in this winter's mode. For the ripening season has witnessed a gathering of the ancient clans of the elegantes and there is heartening promise of a new day in fashions.

Blousing Not So Pronounced.

As for bodices, it is noticeable that blousing is not as pronounced as it has been in seasons just past, says a Paris fashion writer in the Herald-Tribune. Sometimes this winter's bodice will blouse softly all around. Again it is flat in back and slightly bloused in front as well as the reverse of this idea. The princess line is somewhat stronger in evening types, while the slightest taken-in effect appears in some of the suit jackets and frock bodices, although now and again the normal waistline influences the bodice in a rather straightish effect. The bolero is extant in several new forms, as at Worth's where the line is cut rather high and thus gives the feeling of a lifted waistline.

Necklines are sometimes irregular—square in front, for instance, with a side V point in back or the reverse of this, while again the banding of the bodice may permit its irregular line to shape the neckline, thus giving exact unity in composition. Many of the more formal evening gowns have deeply cut V backs. Scarf collars and separate scarfs all lend themselves to the themes used abundantly for defining the neckline. Close, low collars fitting snugly around the neck are shown here and there while many sports types have the regulation soft turn-over collar.

Drop shoulders are quite prevalent. These sometimes drop as low as the deep yoke in a frock and again only tip the shoulder edge. Cap sleeves give this influence, too, when combined with deep, wide flares. Mousquetaire cuffs, various arrangements of bands and little bows lend variety to the sleeve. A frequent sleeve type is one gathered slightly at the wrist and caught into a narrow cuff, reminiscent of the ancient shirtwaist sleeve. Glove cuffs made very tight to extend above the elbow appear in many frocks, usually in a material to contrast with the frock, and in coats the idea is carried out by long, elbow-deep fur cuffs. Long sleeves are used more than ever in evening gowns. Coats have numerous types of sleeves often emphasized below the elbow by way of a muff cuff or a big rounded one.

RADIO

How Radio Service Man Puts Action in Sets

Quite frequently the service man is called in to give his views on the failure of a home-built tuned radio-frequency set to afford volume and selectivity. Often this can be traced to the grid returns of one or more of the RF coils or the detector coil secondary being run to the wrong filament lead. There is a quick way to check up on the former, if the set is the usual type, using 90 volts of "B" battery potential on the plates of all amplifier tubes and 45 volts on the detector tube, with a 4½-volt negative bias on the audio-amplifier grids. It is to insert a 0-50 scale milliammeter in the wire running from the negative terminal of the "B" battery to the common "A" and "B" battery connection. If all is well, the deflection of the needle on the meter will indicate that a current of 17 mils or less is flowing. When a greater amount of current is being consumed, first see that the polarity of the "C" battery is correct, and that its positive terminal is connected to the negative "A" lead. Next, inspect the set and make sure that the RF amplifier grid returns are connected to the negative side of the filament circuit and that those of the audio tubes are run to the negative "C" battery terminal. If a 201-A type tube is being used as detector, it should have a positive grid return, and if the detector is of the 200 or 200-A type, the grid return should be negative.

The milliammeter reading of about 17 mils, as mentioned above, will hold good for storage battery operated sets that do not use power tubes, as these tubes will require higher "B" and "C" voltages and draw a greater amount of plate current. Sets using various types of dry-cell tubes will draw slightly less.

Many owners of factory-made sets are replacing their type 201-A tubes with the type 200-A in the detector stage and are neglecting to change the grid return. This is a point that must be watched if the new tubes are to function properly. If ever you hear a set owner complaining that a special detector is not performing as it should, check up on the grid return before going to any further trouble.

Most Radio Listeners Use Too Much Volume

Aside from altering the receiving conditions, the volume of the loud-speaker rendition may be lowered so as to make the static background less conspicuous.

In fact, most radio listeners do employ too much volume. The average radio receiver has a satisfactory volume control that may be employed in reducing the loud-speaker volume to the desired degree, to drop out the static background.

If the receiver is not provided with a volume control, then a variable high resistance of at least 0 to 250,000 ohm range may be connected across the secondary of the first audio transformer as an effective and nondistorting volume control.

Turning the filaments of the receiver up or down does not constitute an efficient volume control. It should be noted that filaments must be operated at the proper voltage at all times, irrespective of the volume desired.

Dimmed filaments may result in severe distortion, while excessively lighted filaments shorten the life of tubes.

Power Speaker Part of Equipment for Radios

It is evident from a survey of the new radio equipment for the year that the term loud speaker is somewhat antiquated. The newer form, and the more modern, is "power speaker." This is the logical outgrowth of increased interest and experimentation in power equipment for radios.

These power speakers are all that the name implies. They involve the use of the most approved type of speaker unit in combination with power amplifiers operated directly from the electric light circuit. Usually they are a cone type speaker, although in the equipment the appearance of the cone may be submerged because of the form of the cabinet or box in which the combined amplifier and speaker is housed.

To Find Natural Wave Length of an Antenna

To find the approximate natural wave length of an antenna, add the length of the antenna, lead-in and the ground wire and multiply the total length by one and one-half. For example, an antenna 120 feet long, with a 25-foot ground wire, has a total length of 145 feet. Multiplying this figure by 1.5 gives the natural wave in meters, which, in this case, is 217.5 meters.

For the Lead-in Insulator

Instead of drilling a hole through the sash or window casing, or even in the glass, which usually defaces the building, to bring in the lead-in, cut a strip of wood the width of the window and two or three inches high. The board can be easily drilled to place a porcelain insulator and then set on the sill under the sash.

He Was Washed Ashore

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

SLOSH—WOSH— Slosh—wosh—Jim came to with a start.

He sat up gripping both sides of the skiff. The dickens! He was adrift and already several feet from shore. The rope must have come untied from the anchor. Yes, there it was, trailing. But it looked as if—by Jove, it had been cut!

Probably by the read-headed kid back there on the beach, jumping up and down and laughing at him. Wait until he got hold of him.

Thoroughly awakened by this time, Jim examined the boat in which he had so casually allowed himself to take a nap. There were no oars and nothing detachable that might serve as oars. He must either jump overboard and swim, thereby doing considerable damage to his clothes, or else resign himself to the situation.

The outer rim of the small cove was fringed with small islands, some of them grassy and tree clad, others rocky and bare, and one with a house on it.

Chances were that he would eventually bump one of those islands, or could pick up a bit of driftwood and paddle himself to the mainland, signal the occupant of the house.

Not until the skiff's side actually grated on the shoal did Jim feel altogether certain, however, that he was actually going to strike the bit of land with a house on it.

He heaved a sigh of relief, lifted his eyes, then gasped all but audibly.

Above him, obviously amused, was quite the prettiest girl he had ever seen.

Then it flashed upon him that she might possibly be alone upon the island, and, if so, the advent of a strange man would most certainly be annoying. She spoke first.

"I have been watching you, wondering if you would make a good landing. You see—my—my husband will be back here any moment with the boat and will be glad to take you back. I take it you accidentally got afloat."

"You've said it!" cried Jim gaily: "A little red-headed devil cut the rope while I was taking a nap. You see, I was—er—waiting for my—er—wife"—there, that would make it better all around. If she had a husband and he had a wife, the thought of them ought to act as sufficient chaperonage.

"That's what it looked like. That is, I don't mean it looked as if you were waiting for a wife, but as if you were adrift. Won't—won't you come up and wait until my—my husband returns? He's out fishing—there, I think you can see his boat out near that buoy?" She indicated a tiny black spot out towards the horizon. "He'll be starting home presently."

So, for two hours that passed all too swiftly, they sat getting acquainted while the sun sank lower and lower. If the girl was good to look upon, no less, in his own masculine way, was Jim. And they discovered a kindred taste in books, marine engines and radio announcers.

"What a pity," thought the girl, "that every nice young man I meet is always married!"

And "what a shame," thought Jim, "that the only girl I ever knew I could love has a husband!" but they did not speak aloud what was in their minds.

So engrossed did they become in unearthing mutual congenialities that the speck near the horizon had grown to a sizable object easily to be made out as a boat with a single occupant, before either became aware of its approach.

The figure it held was a slim one, khaki clad.

"Needs a haircut!" was Jim's unspoken comment as he glimpsed a tawny mop that matched the sunset.

Then he noticed that his pretty companion was folding and unfolding her slender hands nervously.

"Mr.—er—" she began.

"Jim Murdock," supplied Jim promptly.

"Well—why didn't you say so to start with?" cried the girl. "My sister, who is staying at the hotel, has told me all about you. And about the book you are writing. But—" and she looked at him accusingly. "She distinctly said you were a bachelor!"

"I am," said Jim meekly. "I invented a wife just to save you embarrassment. Thought you might not mind so much my unceremonious intrusion if you thought—"

He was interrupted by a silvery burst of laughter. "How funny!" cried the girl. "I invented a husband for similar reasons. I realized right afterward that sooner or later you'd find out, but I thought for the moment it would suffice. In reality, that person in the boat is my Aunt Agatha, the most indefatigable fisherman in Sheltered Cove!"

That night the telephone in the home of red-headed Billy Masters rang stridently. His mother answered, then turned in amazement to her son who had been watching his mother nervously.

"I don't understand," she said. "A man from the drug store has just called up and said that a gentleman has left orders that every day for a month you are to be given a chocolate ice cream soda charged to his account!"

Fawn "Sponged" Meal

One of the high-bred cows belonging to Benedict Gleogler, a Pocono (Pa.) farmer, lost steadily on her production of milk. A son of the farmer solved the mystery when he went to the pasture. A fawn was taking a meal while the cow munched grass contentedly. When its appetite had been satisfied the young deer left.

VACATION

Little bank roll, ere we part,
Let me hug you to my heart.
All thru the war
I've clung to you,
I've been faithful, you've been true.
Now, little bank roll, in a day,
You and I will start away
To some gay and festive spot;
I'll come back, but you will not!

"Sell your wrist watch and buy an alarm clock," was the prompt answer.
